PREFACE to the TWELFTH EDITION, A. D. 1826.

THE present edition of this Abridgement — nearly the same in substance as the preceding — will be found to differ from it in some particulars, which I shall here briefly notice.

(1.) Whereas, in the principal Latin Alphabet of Appellatives, the detached members of Verbs have hitherto been singly given as independent articles, e. gr. Ædifico, Ædificans, Ædificaturus, Ædificor, Ædificatus, Ædificandus — Nego, Negans, Negor, Negatur, Negatus, Negandus — six articles, in each case, instead of one — and those members often scattered at considerable distances from each other; as Coctus, thirty-six pages distant from Coquo — Cultus, forty pages from Colo; I have, in each case, (with very few and unimportant exceptions) brought all the separate members together under a single head; so that the student will, at one view, discover all the Quotations, References, and Interpretations, of whatever verb may be the object of his search.

(2.) I have given, as distinct articles, the irregular or otherwise difficult Præterites, [Supines,] and Participles, with References to the original Verbs from which they are formed, as Fixi, Vide Figo.

Cucurri, V. Curro.
Victus, V. Vinco.
Vinctus, V. Vincio.
Sanctus, V. Sancio.

(3.) I have rendered the Declensions of Verbs and Nouns more clear and intelligible, by giving the abbreviated forms in a less abbreviated state, or presenting the words at full length, without abbreviation, as exemplified in the following contrast.

Former Editions.	Present Edition.
Duplex, icis.	Duplex, plicis.
Expers, tis.	Expers, pertis.
Dico, ere, xi, etum.	Dico, dicere, dixi, dictum.
Aspicio, ere, exi, etum.	Aspicio, spicere, spexi, spectrum.
Cognosco, ere, ovi, cognitum.	Cognosco, noscere, novi, nitum.

(4.) Those Accusatives and Ablatives of Passive Participles, which are commonly described as Adverbs, are here placed under the head of the original Verbs, as Horrendum, Consulto, Auspicato, Litato, &c.

(5.) Those Adjectives, which are usually accounted Substantives, as agreeing with Vir, Femina, or Negotium understood, are now ranged under the Adjectives to which they properly belong, as Amicus, a, um Subst. Masc. Amicus, ci, a friend. Subst. Fem. Amica, æ, a mistress.

(6.) Accusatives and Ablatives of Adjectives, commonly considered as Adverbs, are placed under the Adjectives from which they are formed, as Triste, Dulce, Multum, Multo, &c.

(7.) In noting the Prosodic Quantity of syllables, I have deviated from the usual practice of leaving unmarked those in which a short vowel stands before a mute and liquid; in consequence of which position, it may be rendered long, and is therefore termed Common. In such cases, I have simply marked the vowel short; taking for granted that any student, who possesses the slightest notion of Prosody will at once perceive that it may be lengthened by the two consonants following, as Lugūbris, Muliēbris, Cŷcnus, Tēchna, &c.

(8.) I have, in various places, introduced additional Quotations and Interpretations, partly taken from my insertions in the last edition of the quarto volume (A. D. 1823,) partly new.

(9.) I have corrected many remaining errors, editorial or typographic, which I had been unable to correct in the preceding edition, for want of the necessary aid; the passages being given in the Quarto, either with wrong references, or no references at all; in consequence of which, I have lost many an hour in the supererogatory * and irksome task of searching for passages, which, after all, I was unable to discover, and was therefore obliged to leave as I had found them.—On the present occasion, I have been more fortunate; my memory recalling or pointing to many of the passages in question, which had attracted my notice, while engaged in the performance of my duty, as Editor of "The Regent's Pocket Classics," of which I have—with credit (it is said) to myself and to the Publishers—already edited fifty-one volumes, containing Cæsar, with Hirtius, &c.—Catullus—Cicero, with the Auctor Rhetoricorum ad Herennium—Claudian—Quint. Curtius—Florus—Horace—Justin—Juvenal, Persius, and Sulpitia—Livy—Lucan—Lucretius—Martial—Cornelius Nepos—Paterculus—Phædrus, with Cato's Disticha Moralia, &c.—Plautus—Pliny junior—Pomponius Mela—Propertius—Publius Syrus—Quintilian—Sallust—Seneca's Tragedies—Silius Italicus—Statius—Suetonius—Symposii Ænigmata—Tacitus—Terence—Tibullus—Valerius Maximus—Virgil.

To my attentive perusal of every page, every word, of those authors, the present edition is not a little indebted; wherefore I venture to indulge the hope, that my Readers will deem it a lucky circumstance that the Classics and the Dictionary had fallen into the same hands.

I have now to request, that any errors, which may yet be discovered in these pages, will be kindly excused: and I avail myself of this occasion, to express my cordial thanks to those Teachers, and others, who have honored with their approbation my successive editions of this work, as well as my numerous elementary publications, calculated to smooth the rugged path to the "Sacred Mount of Science."

Of this Thirteenth Edition,

I deem it sufficient to say, that it contains all the Amendments, and other Improvements, made in the preceding Edition, with the occasional addition of many new ones, of which I here quote a couple:

In Livy (1, 55) we read "AUgebatur ad impensas regis animus," signifying, that he "felt additional encouragement to enlarge his expenditure." But either Littleton, Ainsworth, or Patrick, mistaking U for N, converted AUge batur to ANge batur, and thus mistranslated the passage under the article "Vex:" he "was vexed on account of the expenses"—an error, which escaped the observation of all my predecessors, both in the quarto Editions and the octavo.

Again—Under the article "Tract," the following passage (from Cicero, pro Plancio, 9) "Totus ille tractus celeberrimus," was mistranslated by some one of the above-mentioned editors, who rendered the word "celeberrimus" by "very famous," instead of "very populous," or "thickly inhabited;" which is, in this place, its true meaning, as I have restored it.

West Square,
July 18, 1827.
